GovSense
Named in Top
100 Government-
Focused
Companies

For the second consecutive year, GovSense has been selected as one of the top 100 government companies by GovTech.com, the online publication of Government Technology magazine.

Of the tens of thousands of companies that service the public sector, we were honored to see GovSense selected once again in the top 100.

The editors of Government Technology define a GovTech company as a firm focused on providing solutions for state, local or federal governments, deriving the majority of their revenues from the public sector. GovTech companies can be categorized among four domains: Administration, Service Delivery, Civic Tech and Smart Infrastructure.

With states and localities themselves spending nearly $100 billion annually on IT, the public sector has always been a massive consumer of technology and a major market for the companies serving them.

Government Technology and e.Republic Labs looked for companies that have developed an innovative or disruptive offering to improve or transform government, or have created new models for delivering services. On average, the companies on the list are nine years old and span most of what government does.
